Summary

With more than a decade of research and innovation experience within both academia and industry, I have co-authored 70+ research papers and submitted about 20 co-authored Japanese patent applications. My publications have been cited more than 1,100 times setting my overall h-index to 18 (source: Google Scholar). The areas of research that interest me include, but are not limited to: computational trust systems, privacy and risk, privacy preserving data mining, artificial intelligence and ethics, cybersecurity, distributed consensus, and the Internet of Things. I like building things to solve real-world problems. Outside research and problem solving, I am keen on photography, videography and the associated travels.
